THE POCAHONTAS MINE

Reopened Yesterday and the Search for the Bodies in Progress. Special Dispatch

LYNCHBURG, VA., April 10.-The reopening of the late exploded Pocahontas coal mine is progressing very rapidly, under the supervision of experienced miners from Pennsylvania and Virginia. A six-inch shaft has been made through the top of the mountain, a distance of nearly 150 feet, and the stench emitted from the poisoned air and dead bodies beneath was so sickening that the operatives were driven from their work for some time. Four of the entrances work for some time. Four of the entrances are now open.

Many hodies nearest the entrance have already been secured and of course found in a horrible and decaying condition. Yesterday thirty-five coffins were ordered for the dead from one of the Lynchburg undertakers, and larger orders will follow as the bodies of the unfortunate victims are reached.

At noon to-day the superintendent had the following notice posted at the main entrance to the mines:

A number of the men best acquainted with the deceased will be stationed on the outside to identify the remains. The relatives and friends will be given an opportunity to recognize and claim their own, who will be delivered to them on my order. A careful record will be kept of all the bodies. A final resting place below the town has been selected where all not claimed will be buried.

During the removal and burial of the bodies all persons are requested to observe the solemn decorum befitting the occasion. Appropriate memorial sorvices will be here and experience will be allowed to enter the mines excepting those engaged there.

Resolved. That while we, as GoodTemplars, have long realized the fact that, together with kindred organizations and the church, our labor for the promotion of temperance, morality, and religion have met with abundant successes, we have not fully appreciated our power and the good already accomplished until we now find that the distillers, brewers, and saloonkeepers, with their various organizations, acknowledge their inability to stay the onward march of the virtues, surrounded by which the nefarious traffic and the pernicious customs of those it fosters must die.

Resolved, That we recognize the Protective Leagus just organized in our city as a confession on the part of our opponents of their growing weakness, and its declaration to protect the community against temperance, morality, and religion as challenging the great mass of our people who derive no pecuniary benefit from the traffic in intoxicating liquors, or who do not deem it proper to sacrifice principle, either for gain or for the pernetuation of imported customs.

Resolved, That this lodge accepts this challenge; pledges itself anew to the work of extending temperance, morality, and religion; and that in this slelf-imposed work for God and humanity we invite the co-operation of every lady and gentleman in this district.

A vote of thanks was presented to Brother Resolved. That while we, as GoodfTemplars, have

A ROASTING FOR COOK.

Inspector Woodward Tells What He Knows About the Star Route Trials,

And Makes Very Grave Accusations Against the Assistant Counsel,

Mr. Gibson Comes in for a Good Share of Denunciation From the Witness.

A Mysterious Attempt to Entrap Presis dent Ganfield Still Unexplained.

Mr. P. H. Woodward, inspector of the postoffice department, was examined by Mr. Springer's committee yesterday in relation to the alleged star route frauds. He said he was first summoned to Washington to take part in the star route investigations on March 10, 1881. He made an examination of the route from Mineral Park, Ariz., to Pioche, Nev., the pay of which was advanced in eight months from $2,982 to $52,033 annually. "On Saturday evening," the witness said, "I showed the results of my initial examinations to Mr. James. He was amazed at the revelation, and hurried me off to the white house. On looking over the figures President Garfield shared in the astonishment of the postmastor general. At first he could hardly credit their genuinoness. In reply to a question from Mr. James, respecting the policy to be pursued, he said in substance, 'I have sworn to uphold the constitution and the laws. I shall do my full duty. My instructions to you are, Cut the ulcer out, no matter whom it hurts.' With much impressive of course for the second constitution. much impressiveness of mannor Gen. Garfield referred to some mysterious attempt to entrap him, the meaning of which was now first revealed to him. He added that it was by no wisdom or foresight of his own that he had escaped a great peril. Our silent curiosity," continued Mr. Woodward, "was not gratified by further explanation. At this interview I first learned that the investigation was likely to lead to crimial process. to lead to criminal prosecutions. The de-claive order was given by the commander-into lead to criminal prosecutions. The decisive order was given by the commander-inchiel."

The witness referred to the resignation of Brady and French as postofice officials, and of the employment of A. M. Gibson as special counsel, the latter having "intimated that he possessed a minute knowledge of the inner history of the frauds and the influence to press important witnesses into use." Mr. Woodward described the information given by Mr. George F. Brott, which he said "led to the forced retirement from office of J. M. McGirew, sixth auditor, and of Fred B. Lilley, deputy sixth auditor, but middly, re-enforced them. Shortly after the engagement of Mr. Cook was publicly announced I received a summons from President Garfield to be at the white house at a designated hour. Without much preface he said he had sont for me to ask if I could explain how the appointment came to be made; that the day before a judge of the supreme court had intion was a disgrace to the administration. "I attempted to justify the appointment on the ground that, as the investigation widened, it would be desirable to have in the cases a local lawyer who possessed an intimate and extensive knowledge not enly of the widened, it would be desirable to have in the cases a local lawyer who possessed an intimate and extensive knowledge not only of the criminal class, but also of the darker elements that go to make up the life of the district. The President seemed partially satisfied."

The witness gave a detailed account of the confession of Berdell. He said: "Rerdell exhibited a memorandum alleged to be in the exhibited a memorandum alleged to be in the writing of Stephen W. Doracy, charging to the firm the following donations of mining stocks: James N. Tyner, 1,500 shares, $2,000; William H. Turner, 1,200 shares, $1,500. In one instance within the knowledge of Rerdell Dorsey paid $2,000 on the bonds of failing bidders to secure settlement. Of this sum $1,000 reached the public treasury and $1,000 the pockets of the then sixth auditor and his deputy."

The witness further said: "Rerdell soon yielded to the importunities of his old associates. At that time he possessed valu-able papers, and would have made an important witness. I shall never forgive myself that undue defference to official station de-terred me from cleaving to this man till the last scrap of evidence had been wrang from him. The hand of one could have held him firmly, but from our joint grasp he was easily fished away."

Mr. Woodward said the representations of Mr. Woodward said the representations of Mr. Cook that he had several private interviews with President Gardeld prior to the time he was introduced by Mr. James were false. "On that occasion," the witness continued, "other topics were breached more pregnant with significance than comments on the progress of the cases or sensational warnings in reference to dangers threatening the president and two of his cabinet. Mr. Cook insisted that immunity should be granted to Stephen W. Dorsey on account of his great Stephen W. Dorsey on account of his great services to the republican party. In answer I modestly suggested that penal laws and penitentiaries were not devised for the exclusive benefit of democrats. To illustrate the total depravity of the star routers, Mr. Cook told the president that Gen. Brady had already attempted to corrupt even him."

"Him, Cook," interposed Mr. Milliken.
"Yes, him. He said he had been invited to meet a representative of that gentleman at the Portland; that fearing a trap he de clined to go thither, but did receive the representative at his own effice, having first prudently concealed a detective under the bed to overhear the conversation. I scrutinized the face of Mr. Garfield to disscratinized the face of hir Garnold to discover the impression made upon his mind by these strange outpourings, but his impassive features gave no response. In view of the fact, however, that in a community where he had lived for many years, and where his character was minutely known, the virtue of Mr. Cook had se soon been thus rudely tempted, one could not help asking mentally how long it would be able to resist the abook. Gen. Swaim, the close personal friend of Mr. Garfield, thoroughly familiar with the inner history of his oughly familiar with the liner history of his-brief administration, remembers the indigna-tion of the president over the appointment of Mr. Cook and my summons to the white house in quest of an explanation. He re-members the presidential reasons which with-held the president from ordering the sum-mary dismissal of Mr. Cook on account of his moral unfitness for the trust." An inmary dismissal of Mr. Cook on account of his moral unfitness for the trust." An interview with Thomas A. McDevitt was cited. The witness said: "McDevitt was cited. The witness said: "McDevitt explained how a farm and quarry near Richmond, Va., were conveyed at a nominal consideration of $78,000 to James Kee and W. H. Crawford, of Philadelphia, for the express purpose of qualifying them to become surciles on the proposals made by him; how the property was reconveyed to the original owner after the contract term began; how he himself, with proposals resting on such security, obtained a number of routes in Dakota and Montana; how petitions for increase and expedition were getten up and forwarded to him without compensations by one Ears Traverse, of Nevada; how he himself, with no personal knowledge of the matters involved, made the affidavits respecting stock and carriers intended to measure the cost of expedition; how, though a stranger, he secured from tien Brady orders which vassly expedition; how, though a stranger, he secured from tien. Brady orders which vastly increased the cost of the service, and how,
